

RISHI BANKIM CHANDRA COLLEGE FOR WOMEN

Program Outcomes

Department of POLITICAL SCIENCE

SI No.	PO Master Name
1	PO1: Students gain comprehensive understanding of political science and demonstrate a deep understanding of political theories, concepts, and frameworks.
2	PO2: Students gain knowledge of political systems and institutions and are able to analyze the structure, functions, and interactions of political institutions, including governments, parliaments, and international organizations.
3	PO3: Students will have an understanding of political ideologies and philosophies. Examine the principles, values, and implications of major political ideologies, such as realism, liberalism, Marxism, conservatism, socialism, and feminism.
4	PO4: Students will cultivate critical thinking and analysis and will be able to apply critical thinking and analytical skills to evaluate complex political issues, arguments, and evidence.
5	PO5: Students will inculcate effective communication and writing and at the same time develop well-structured, clearly argued, and well-written essays, reports, and presentations on political topics.
6	PO6: Students will be able to do research and understand problem-solving equations. They will be able to design and conduct research projects, collect and analyze data, and develop practical solutions to political problems.
7	PO7: Application of theoretical knowledge to real-world issues. Use political theories, concepts, and frameworks to analyze and address contemporary political challenges.
8	PO8: Development of policy briefs and understanding and create well-researched, clearly argued, and feasible policy briefs and recommendations on political issues.
9	PO9: Participation in debates, discussions, and simulations. Engage in respectful, informed, and constructive debates, discussions, and simulations on political topics.
10	PO10: Commitment to civic engagement and democratic values and human rights.
11	P011: Appreciation for diversity, inclusivity, and social justice as well as recognize the importance of diversity, inclusivity, and social justice in political systems and societies.
12	P012: Development of ethical awareness and responsibility. Apply ethical principles and consider the potential consequences of political actions and decisions.

RISHI BANKIM CHANDRA COLLEGE FOR WOMEN

Course Outcomes

Department of POLITICAL SCIENCE

SI No.	Semester	Course Name	Course Outcome
1	1st Semester	Plsacor01t (understanding political theory)	Students will be able to define and explain key concepts in political theory, such as sovereignty, nation, state, equality, power, and authority etc. they can identify and analyze major political ideologies and approaches such as traditional, marxist, behavioural and post-behavioural. they will have the skill and capacity to understand the evolution of state and how it came into existence and the importance of it. they will hone skills that will help them to critically evaluate political theories and ideologies will be understanding and identifying their strengths and weaknesses and analyzing their implications for political practice. students will be able to analyze and interpret political texts, including the works of major political theorists, and identify their key arguments and concepts. students will be able to develop and defend a political argument, using evidence and reasoning to support their claims.
2	1st Semester	Plsacor02t (constitutional government and democracy in india)	Students will understand the evolution and development of the indian constitution and be able to explain the historical context, key features, and amendments to the indian constitution. they will be able to explain the principles of constitutional government in india and describe the principles of constitutional government, including the rule of law, separation of powers, and checks and balances. students will be able to outline the organization and functions of the indian government, including the union, states, and local governments. students will be able to explain the role of institutions such as the parliament, judiciary, election commission, and media in indian democracy. students will also develop a commitment to active citizenship and democratic participation. students will be able to develop a commitment to active citizenship and democratic participation, recognizing the importance of individual and collective action in shaping political outcomes.
3	2nd Semester	Plsacor03t (political theory: concepts and debates)	Students will be able to define and explain key concepts in political theory such as nationalism, sovereignty, nation-state, rights, liberty, and equality. students will be able to understand the historical development of political theory, including the contributions of major thinkers such as plato, rawls, austin, anderson and hayes. students will analyze the debates surrounding nationalism and nation-state. students will have an understanding of various concepts like rights, liberty, equality and justice. they will understand nuanced concepts related to justice according to plato and rawls. students will also understand theories of the state like the idealist theory and liberal and neo-liberal theories. students will be able to participation in debates, discussions, and simulations. engage in respectful, informed, and constructive debates, discussions, and simulations on political topics. students will also understand concepts pertaining to nationalism and its various facets.
4	2nd Semester	Plsacor04t (political process in india)	Students will have the ability to analyze and understand the political process in india and explain the key features, institutions, and processes that shape indian politics. students will become familiar with the details of public policy adopted in india. students will develop analytical skills to examine the political process in india. students will be able to think critically about the strengths and weaknesses of the political process in india. they will also be able to apply theoretical knowledge to real-world scenarios and also have an understanding of the political process in india

SI No.	Semester	Course Name	Course Outcome
			to real-world scenarios and case studies. they will also be able to evaluate the implications of political processes for indian society including their impact on different social groups and communities. they will also have knowledge in regards to the electoral process and electoral commission in india. students will also analyse various contemporary issues in the indian politics in terms of regionalism in india and the role of religion, caste, dalits and women. students will also learn about the relationship between media and politics.
5	3rd Semester	Plsacor05t (introduction to comparative government and politics)	Students will be able to understand the key concepts and theories in comparative government and politics and explain key concepts such as capitalism, socialism, colonialism and decolonization. students will also understand the nature and scope of comparative politics which goes beyond eurocentrism. after this paper students will be equipped to do a comparative study of constitutional developments and political economy of countries such as britain, brazil and china. students will also understand the relevance of political economy and the importance of globalization.
6	3rd Semester	Plsacor06t (perspectives on public administration)	Students will understand the various theories associated with public administration like that of classical theories, neo-classical theories and contemporary theories. students will be able to explain the historical context and key milestones in the development of public administration. students will be able to apply theoretical knowledge to real-world problems and scenarios in public administration. students will be equipped with skills that can be used for various scenarios in terms of paper writing and research. students will also be able to analyse various concepts of bureaucracy like the marxian and weber's concept of democracy. students will also be able to analyse various concepts surrounding new public management and various perspectives associated with public administration.
7	3rd Semester	Plsacor07t (perspectives on international relations and world history)	Students will be able to explain the historical development of international relations, including the impact of major events, ideologies, and institutions that lead to the evolution and establishment of modern concepts and state system. students will also have familiarity with key concepts and theories in international relations and compare different theoretical perspectives on international relations, including realism, liberalism, and constructivism including various approaches like marxist and feminist. students will be equipped with knowledge of major events and trends in world history including the rise and fall of empires, causes and consequences of world war i, ii and cold war. students will be able to understand the need and kind of relationship between states and various doctrines associated with it. students will also analyse the concept of third world and its significance. students will be able to do research and understand problem-solving equations. they will be able to design and conduct research projects, collect and analyze data, and develop practical solutions to political problems. students will be equipped to understand the motivation and the actions of states using various theories that can be applicable.
8	4th Semester	Plsacor08t (political processes and institutions in comparative perspective)	Students will be able to think critically and analytically about complex political phenomena and institutions while understanding various political cultures. students will also be able to understand the historical evolution and debates relating to the concept of nation and state. students would also be able to analyse the process of democratization in post-colonial, post-authoritarian and post-communist countries. students will be able to compare and contrast different political institutions and processes across various countries and regions. students will be able to communicate effectively and write clearly about complex political topics and issues. students will be able to apply theoretical knowledge to real-world cases and scenarios in comparative politics. students will be able to evaluate the strengths and weaknesses of different political institutions and processes, including their impact on democracy, stability, and economic development. students will also be able to analyse the historical contexts and emergence of party system.

SI No.	Semester	Course Name	Course Outcome
9	4th Semester	Plsacor09t (public policy and administration in india)	Students will develop a nuanced understanding of the complexities of public policy and administration in india, including the challenges of implementing policies and programs in a diverse and dynamic society. students will recognize the importance of ethics and accountability in public policy and administration, including the need for transparency, responsiveness, and accountability in policy-making and implementation. students will develop a commitment to public service values and principles, including a recognition of the importance of serving the public interest and promoting the common good. students will also be able to analyse the concept and significance of budget and budget cycle in india. students will also understand the need for various redressal mechanism in place for public grievances.
10	4th Semester	Plsacor010t (global politics)	Students will be able to explain the key concepts and theories in global politics, including globalization and debates surrounding sovereignty and territoriality. students will be able to describe and compare different global institutions and organizations, including the united nations, the european union, and the world trade organization and analyse its significance and politics involved within. students will be able to identify and explain the significance of major global issues and challenges, including climate change, poverty, inequality, and human rights brought about by the spread of globalization. students will be able to think critically and analytically about complex global issues and challenges. students will be able to apply theoretical knowledge to real-world global scenarios and case studies. students will be able to communicate effectively and write clearly about complex global issues and challenges. students will also be able to understand the significance of nuclear weapons and debates relating to the concept of human security and migration.
11	5th Semester	Plsacor011t (classical political philosophy)	Students will be able to explain the key concepts and ideas of classical political philosophers, such as plato, aristotle, machiavelli, hobbes and locke. students will be able to describe the historical context in which classical political philosophy developed, including the social, cultural, and intellectual trends. students will be able to think critically and analytically about complex philosophical concepts and ideas. students will be able to communicate effectively and write clearly about complex philosophical concepts and ideas. students will also be able to critically analyse various concepts of state, democracy and citizenships; it's evolution and significance.
12	5th Semester	Plsacor012t (indian political thought)	Students will be able to explain the key concepts and ideas of indian political philosophers, such as kautilya, barani, kabir and abdul fazal. students will be able to describe the historical context in which indian political philosophy developed, including the social, cultural, and intellectual trends. students will be able to think critically and analytically about complex philosophical concepts and ideas. students will be able to communicate effectively and write clearly about complex philosophical concepts and ideas in the indian context. students will also be able to critically analyse various concepts of rajadharma, social laws, monarchy, aganna sutta; it's evolution and significance.
13	5th Semester	Plsadse02t (women, power	Students will be able to explain the key concepts and theories related to women, power, and politics, including feminism, patriarchy, and

SI No.	Semester	Course Name	Course Outcome
		and politics)	intersectionality and debates surrounding public and private divide.
14	5th Semester	Plsads03t (understanding global politics)	Students will develop a nuanced understanding of the complexities of global politics, including the intersections of politics, economics, culture, and society. students will be able to hold conversations in terms of debates surrounding global inequalities and violence and various ecological issues. students will develop a commitment to promoting global justice and human rights, including the ability to analyze complex issues and develop well-supported arguments for promoting global justice and human rights. students will also understand the importance of various global institutions like imf, world bank and wto.
15	6th Semester	Plsacor013t (modern political philosophy)	Students will be able to explain the key concepts and ideas of modern political philosophy of kant, hegel, wollstonecraft, friedan, mill and marx. students will be able to describe and compare the major thinkers and texts of modern political philosophy. students will also be able to understand the concept of enlightenment, civil society and concepts relating to liberty and government. students would also be able to understand the complex marxian view and the rise and development of capitalism and class struggle.
16	6th Semester	Plsacor014t (indian political thought)	Students will be able to explain the key concepts and ideas of indian political philosophers, such as rammohan roy, vivekananda, gandhi, ambedkar, tagore, iqbal and nehru. students will be able to describe the historical context in which indian political philosophy developed, including the social, cultural, and intellectual trends. students will be able to think critically and analytically about complex philosophical concepts and ideas. students will be able to communicate effectively and write clearly about complex philosophical concepts and ideas in the indian context. students will also be able to critically analyse various concepts of social justice, nationalism, views on state, secularism etc.
17	6th Semester	Plsads04t (public policy in india)	Students will be able to explain the key concepts and theories of public policy, including policy formulation, implementation, evaluation, interest groups and social movements. students will be able to describe the indian policy-making process, including the role of the government, bureaucracy, and civil society. students will be able to think critically and analytically about complex policy issues and challenges in india. students will develop a commitment to promoting good governance and public accountability, including the ability to analyze complex issues and develop well-supported arguments for promoting transparency and accountability in government. students will have an understanding of the nehruvian vision, economic liberalization and recent developments in the indian context.
18	6th Semester	Plsads06t (governance: issues and challenges)	Students will have an understanding of the concept of governance and its significance, its evolution, and its significance in modern societies. students will be able to identify and explain the key issues and challenges in governance, including corruption, accountability, transparency, and participation. students will also have knowledge about the role of state in the era of globalization and the relationship between state, market and civil society. students will be able to describe and compare the major theories and models of governance, including the new public management, good governance, and participatory governance.